THE DREAM CODEX — THEME OVERVIEW

The unconscious mind is the oldest self-care system in existence. Before journaling, before therapy, before every framework for understanding yourself — there were dreams. Carl Jung spent fifty years mapping the territory: archetypes, the shadow, the anima, individuation, the collective unconscious. Sigmund Freud opened the first door. August Kekulé dreamed the benzene ring. Neil Gaiman's Sandman made Dream one of the Endless.

The Dream Codex treats the vocabulary of depth psychology as a self-care language. Naming what moves through you in sleep is the same act as naming what moves through you in a journal. The unconscious does not distinguish between night and day. It only asks: are you paying attention?

FLAVOR TEXT — THE DREAM CODEX

> "Until you make the unconscious conscious, it will direct your life and you will call it fate." — Carl Jung. The journal is the act of making the unconscious conscious. Every entry is an act of individuation.

> "The interpretation of dreams is the royal road to a knowledge of the unconscious activities of the mind." — Sigmund Freud. The road is still open. It runs through every entry you write about what happens while you sleep.

> "I saw in a dream a serpent biting its own tail. I awoke as if by a flash of lightning — and that night I worked out the rest of the hypothesis." — August Kekulé, on discovering the benzene ring structure. The unconscious solved the problem. The dream was the delivery mechanism.

> "Dream is one of the Endless. He is as old as stories." — Neil Gaiman, The Sandman. Every dream you record is a letter to the Dream Lord.

> "Nature loves courage." — Terence McKenna. The psychonaut's self-care is the exploration of consciousness itself. The practice is the vessel.
