SELF-CARE RESONANCE – KEY ENTRIES

[captain_log] The captain who logs the red alert days has a record that a captain who only logs the easy days does not. The log is for the days that need to be named.

[life_support] Life support is not the mission. It is the precondition for any mission. The crew is alive. That is enough today.

[course_correction] No ship holds a perfect course. Corrections are navigation. The ship that arrives corrected its heading a thousand times en route.

[red_alert] Red alert is not a death sentence. It is the ship acknowledging that full attention is required now. The log entry from a red alert day is the most important log you have.

[away_mission] The away mission takes you somewhere the bridge cannot follow. Write the report when you get back: what happened, what changed, what you carry home.

FLAVOR TEXT – THE STARSHIP LOG

> "Captain's log, stardate... and then the honest account. Not what should be happening. What is. The log is not for the good days. The log is for the days that need to be named."

> "Yuri Gagarin's transmission from orbit: The Earth is blue. How wonderful. It is amazing. Not a technical report. The first human in space wrote an aesthetic response. That is what every journal entry is: the first human account of this particular place."

> "The Eagle has landed. Four words. The entire Apollo program. Your four-word log entry is as valid as Armstrong's. You were there. Write it."

> "Open hailing frequencies. The request to reach across the void and try to make contact. The frequency carries no guarantee of reply. It carries the attempt. The ship logs the time the frequency was opened. You tried. That is the entry."
