THE ROLEPLAYER — THEME OVERVIEW

The tabletop roleplaying game is the oldest form of collaborative storytelling with mechanics. Dungeons & Dragons was published in 1974 — a boxed set of rules that turned imagination into a structured language for adventure. Hit points, saving throws, spell slots: these are not game abstractions. They are the vocabulary of survival, recovery, and power management that every serious practitioner of self-care already uses.

You do not have infinite spell slots. You need a long rest. The saving throw is the moment between the hit and the damage. The party rally is why you do not practice alone. Natural 20 is the moment everything goes perfectly right. The character sheet is a map of who you are right now.

This is not metaphor. This is the vocabulary of the practice named correctly.

FLAVOR TEXT

> "The whole point of the game is the story." — Gary Gygax. Every journal entry is a session log. Every check-in is a roll. The dungeon is real. The loot is real. The rest at the inn after a hard encounter is what makes the next encounter possible.

> "Roll for initiative." The most important sentence in tabletop gaming. It asks: who acts first? The practice asks the same. The check-in is rolling for initiative in your own story. You go first.

> "The dungeon master is the first author of every session." — Gygax. The DM does not win. The DM makes the world worth playing in. That is what self-care does: it makes the world worth playing in.

> "Sigil is the City of Doors — every faction believes something different about the planes." — Planescape. The self is the City of Doors. Every door leads somewhere. The practice is what lets you walk through them.

SELF-CARE VOCABULARY MAPPING

TTRPG Term	Self-Care Meaning
`nat_twenty`	A day everything went right — celebrate it
`long_rest`	Full night's sleep / actual recovery / not pushing through
`hit_points`	Current health / energy / capacity to act
`char_sheet`	Honest self-assessment of where you are right now
`initiative_roll`	Choosing to act first in your own story
`spell_slots`	Finite energy — you cannot cast without resources
`saving_throw`	Resisting a difficult moment / passing a hard check
`party_rally`	Calling on your support system / not going solo
`xp_milestone`	Learning from what you survived — every hard day counts
`homebrew_arc`	Building your own practice — no official rulebook required
`dungeon_master`	Taking authorship of your own story
`epic_campaign`	The long-form practice — session by session, year by year
